A Place to Escape

Any given week, there's a new project, show or collection from a T contributor that we can't get enough of — including the exhibition that the creative director Michael Reynolds recently curated at the new Hostler Burrows space. Alongside large-scale photographs by Victoria Sambunaris, featuring wide open landscapes — remote sand dunes marred by tire tracks, a black stretch of land mined for coal — he has included various design objects from the gallery's permanent collection, essentially staging a stunning space one can explore (and escape to in the warmer days to come). On view through June 30 at Hostler Burrows, 35 East 10th Street, New York, hostlerburrows.com — A.L.B.
